Description

This impressive George III oak dresser base, dating from the late 18th century, is a refined and well-proportioned example of English furniture from the period. Crafted from solid oak, the dresser displays a rich, deep colour with an attractive, well-developed patina that reflects its age and quality. The base is fitted with three generously sized drawers, each retaining brass swan-neck handles and escutcheons, adding decorative elegance to the strong architectural form. The dresser stands on gracefully shaped cabriole legs, lending lightness and sophistication to the piece while firmly anchoring it in the George III period. Its substantial scale and clean lines make it highly versatile, suitable for use as a kitchen dresser base, sideboard, or statement console. The combination of robust oak construction and elegant cabriole legs results in a dresser base that is both practical and visually striking.

Key Features • George III period oak dresser base • Constructed from solid oak • Three drawers with brass swan-neck handles • Stands on elegant cabriole legs • Excellent colour and aged patina • Strong, well-balanced proportions _____
