Description

George V Camphor Wood Brass Bound Campaign Chest A fine George V period camphor wood campaign chest, expertly crafted in the early 20th century and retaining its original brass bindings, corner mounts, and campaign handles. Designed for durability and portability, this chest exemplifies classic British military campaign furniture, where elegance met practicality. Constructed from richly grained camphor wood, the chest displays a warm honey tone with attractive figuring throughout. The brass-bound edges not only enhance the visual appeal but also served to protect the piece during travel, making it ideal for officers stationed abroad. Its robust construction and timeless proportions allow it to function equally well today as a blanket chest, storage trunk, coffee table, or statement piece. Camphor wood was the preferred choice of timber to be used for posting to the Far East as the scent repels all the moths and bugs that would attack an officers uniforms and possessions. This is a handsome and versatile antique, perfect for traditional interiors, period properties, or eclectic contemporary spaces seeking character and history. _____ Key ...
