Description

A large 19th century french brass mantle clock, heavily decorated with intricate details and at the top, a large statue of what is probably an interpretation of rebecca at the well. The clock is a piece of sculpture in its own right and is in good condition for its age. The clock itself does require some restoration, there is a hand missing from the face. The door at the back is missing and the bell and pendulum are missing, there is also a foot at the back of the casement which is missing, there is no key, but everything else seems to be present. Measurements Height 66cm Width 45cm Depth 16.5cm
