Description

A superb oak drop-leaf table in excellent antique condition. The central rectangular top is flanked by two hinged leaves that rise to form a generous oval surface, allowing the piece to shift effortlessly between compact and extended form of 159.5cm deep. Below the top are two practical pull-out drawers, perfect for storing cutlery or linens. The table stands on beautifully turned barley-twist legs, united by matching stretchers that provide both stability and visual harmony. The oak has matured to a warm, even patina, accentuating the grain and lending the piece a welcoming, time-softened character. A versatile and decorative table, equally at home as a dining piece, occasional table, or hall feature, and a lovely example of traditional English craftsmanship.
