Description

A superb example of a Conway valley oak dresser base and rack. The base consists of three drawers along the top with a further three down the centre and either side cupboard doors. The drawers have a simple locking mechanism accessed by the right hand cupboard door (see photos). The "belly" rack is deep and typical of this transitional style of dresser which emerged from the enclosed cupboards of the period, having wonderful turned droppers on either side. This piece has indeed a fabulous patina and apart from some historical repairs is in excellent original condition.
