Description

Fine Pâte-sur-Pâte Porcelain Pitcher – Samuel Alcock, England, Mid-Late 19th Century A lovely and refined example of pâte-sur-pâte porcelain, formed as a pitcher and decorated in elegant white relief on a coral ground. This piece is identified as the Portland pattern, produced by Samuel Alcock in England during the mid to later nineteenth century. The decoration is delicately executed, with the translucent white relief standing out beautifully against the rich coral background, demonstrating the high level of skill associated with Alcock's pâte-sur-pâte wares. Height: 7.5 inches (to the top of the handle) Condition: Offered in excellent condition, with no noted damage or restoration. A highly attractive and collectable piece of Victorian English porcelain, well suited to collectors of fine decorative ceramics or pâte-sur-pâte work.
