Description

An 18th century fruitwood tripod table having superb colour and patination. The table has a tilting plank top, which is excellent for utilising space when not in use. The top has a wrought iron latch underneath to secure the top down when in use. The centre of the table has a finely turned balustr support with three dove tailed cabriole legs. There has been a number of old restorations to the table along with evidence of old wood worm damage in a few places, commensurate with age.
