Description

A substantial and well-proportioned large antique oak sideboard, dating from the early 20th century, beautifully crafted in solid oak with rich grain and a warm, dark patina developed over time. The upper section features four panelled cupboard doors with elegant arched detailing and geometric diamond carvings, opening to reveal shelved storage ideal for crockery, books, or household linens. Below, there are four drawers, including divided cutlery compartments, all fitted with original brass handles. The piece stands on turned legs joined by sturdy stretchers, giving both visual balance and structural stability. The craftsmanship and proportions make it equally suitable as a dining room sideboard, hall cupboard, or statement storage piece in a period or country interior. In very good antique condition throughout. There are honest signs of age and use, including surface wear, small marks, and variations in tone, all consistent with its age and visible in the photographs. These details enhance the character and authenticity of the piece. Structurally solid and ready for use.
