Description

Here's a very large antique pine wardrobe dating from around 1900, with a lovely decorative cornice at the top. The crown section can be removed if preferred, slightly reducing the overall height and giving the piece a simpler look. The wardrobe is in really nice condition and features two drawers at the base. It fully dismantles for delivery, so it should go up most stairways without too much trouble. Where possible, delivery and assembly can be done in person, though courier delivery can also be arranged if you're further away, with instructions provided for reassembly. At present, the interior is fitted with its original painted shelves, which can be easily removed. A hanging rail can be fitted if you'd prefer to use it as a wardrobe, and the layout could also be adapted to suit your needs — for example, hanging space on one side and shelving on the other. The drawers slide smoothly and are fitted with a working key (not original, but functional). The piece is currently in bare wood and could be wax-finished if desired. With an internal depth (hanging space) of 18.5", it should be fine for hanging most items, though it may be a little tight for very large coats or ...
