Description

A fine George III Serpentine Mahogany Commode, Firmly Attributed to Henry Hill of Marlborough with wonderful original colour and patina. English Circa 1770 Of outstanding colour and patination, this fine commode is of serpentine shape, highly influenced by the French models of the late rococo period but with a very English sensibility. It is veneered throughout in mahogany of exceptional figure, the veneers bookmatched across the drawer fronts for additional visual impact. The veneers on the top of the piece are especially well figured and have aged beautifully. The commode consists of three drawers with a brushing slide above, standing on curving feet which come directly from the stiles as is usually the case on commodes of this form. The commode is firmly attributed to the fine maker Henry Hill of Marlborough. Active from around 1741 until his death in 1778, Hill had a wide-ranging clientele, certainly not merely restricted to the local area as was the case for many provincial makers. His clients included Baron Methuen of Corsham Court, the Hoare family at Stourhead and the Talbot family of Lacock Abbey but he also provided large amounts of furniture to the Delavel ...
