Description

Regency Rosewood Console / Turnover Top Tea Table – Circa 1820 A superb early 19th century Regency rosewood console table of elegant proportions, dating to around 1820. This versatile piece features a beautifully figured rosewood top with a classic turnover mechanism, allowing it to transform effortlessly from a refined console table into a practical tea or card table. The rectangular top sits above a frieze with finely carved scrolling corbels, all raised on a bold central pedestal support. The column flows down to a concave platform base terminating in beautifully carved scroll feet with original castors, making it easy to move when entertaining. Richly toned rosewood with excellent grain and a deep, warm patina throughout, showcasing the quality craftsmanship typical of the Regency period. The proportions are graceful and balanced, making it ideal for a hallway, drawing room, or sitting room. When the top is open the dimensions width 92 cm depth 90 cm height 72 cm We can arrange delivery through out the UK
