Description

A finely executed demi-lune side cabinet conceived in the neoclassical taste, displaying an accomplished command of marquetry, parquetry and richly figured veneers. The serpentine front and bowed ends are raised on tapering square legs terminating in block feet, giving the piece a light architectural presence while maintaining formal classical symmetry. The cabinet is veneered predominantly in vibrant, flame-figured satinwood, carefully bookmatched across the doors and top to create a luminous and visually dynamic surface. The central pair of cupboard doors are each inlaid with an oval reserve depicting a classical urn draped with festoons, executed in contrasting timbers against a warm ground. These urn panels are framed by delicate stringing and crossbanding, with radiating fan motifs to the corners, demonstrating precise and confident marquetry workmanship. Above, the frieze is decorated with inlaid swags suspended between stylized foliate devices, rendered in subtly stained veneers that provide refined tonal contrast while preserving the overall harmony of the design. Both bowed sides mirror one another and are centered with striking parquetry panels composed of alter...
