Description

A beautiful early 20th century oak bureau bookcase, crafted in richly grained golden oak and featuring a fall front writing desk with open shelving above and below. The upper section opens to reveal a charming fitted interior with arched divisions and a central shelf ideal for letters, stationery, or display. The fall front panel creates a practical writing surface and locks securely with its original working key, included. The lower open shelves provide useful storage for books or decorative pieces, while the shaped apron and side detailing add subtle elegance typical of the Edwardian period. Compact in scale yet highly functional, this is a perfect piece for a hallway, study, bedroom or smaller home office. Very good antique condition. The structure is solid and stable, fall front operates correctly, and the lock works with the original key. Attractive oak grain throughout with light age related wear consistent with use. Clean, well presented and ready to use.
