Description

A mid to late 20th century gilt bronze ornamental urn, made after the designs of Henry Dasson, and stamped "Henry Dasson" to the front of the base. The urn is of trophy form, with a bronze body and gilt bronze mounts, and is designed as a decorative sculptural vase or centrepiece. The piece features elaborate floral handles in the Art Nouveau taste, each surmounted by a ho-ho bird, with flowing naturalistic forms typical of decorative revival pieces inspired by 19th century French design. The scale and weight give it strong presence, making it suitable as a centrepiece or decorative focal object within a traditional or eclectic interior. About Henry Dasson Henry Dasson (1825–1896) was one of the most highly regarded French bronze workers and cabinet makers of the 19th century. Working in Paris, he became known for producing exceptionally high-quality furniture and decorative objects inspired by the finest 18th century French makers. Dasson exhibited at major international exhibitions and was celebrated for the quality of his gilt bronze mounts and attention to detail. Pieces made after his designs continue to be popular for their craftsmanship and strong association ...
