Description

A Delightful Early 18th Century, George I Period, Quilted Elm Lowboy, Or Side Table, Of Superb Untouched Colour And Patina Throughout, The Exceptionally Well Figured Top Over Long & Two Short Drawers, With Replacement Old Brass Handles, Raised On Very Elegant Cabriole Legs With Pointed Pad Feet To Front And Back. Throughout the first half of the 18th century any form of side table was generally referred to as a lowboy and nearly always constructed from rich, attractive solid timbers due to the plentiful supply of these at the time. This is an exceptionally good example of its type, with a superbly figured top, which continues throughout the rest of the piece creating real elegance in combination with the lovely shaped frieze and elegant cabriole legs. It has certainly aged well retaining a lovely warm colour and although the brasswear is not original, it is very much in the style which the piece would have sported originally and looks fantastic on it. There are of course plenty of historic lumps, bumps and scrapes and signs of age, but nothing which is out of keeping for an item this old. Indeed we would say the condition is actually very good and that clearly this el...
