Description

An Extremely Unusual Late 18th Century, George III Period, Mahogany China Display Cabinet, Or Bookcase, Having Well Figured Step Moulded Cornice Over Two Astragal Glazed Doors, Enclosing Three Adjustable Shelves, And Elegant Arched Apron To Top Part, Over Table Type Base With Five Short Drawers, Retaining Original Brass Handles, Raised On Four Square Legs. This is a really lovely quality georgian display cabinet. Or possibly it should actually be described as an 18th century bookcase! Its of such an unusual form that it is difficult to pin down its original purpose, although it must be said that now the relatively compact proportions, neat design and excellent functionality make it a great option for the modern home. The top part is realtively typical of an 18th century bookcase top, with elegant astragal glazing enclosing three adjustable shelves. The mahogany used in the construction is good quality and this can be seen with the well figured veneers in various places. The bottom part however is most unusual indeed. Where one would perhaps expect to find a couple of cupboard doors, or a full length back of drawers, what you actually find is a typical little georgian...
