Description

A charming antique Victorian miniature brass carriage clock with alarm, housed in a traditional gilt brass case with bevelled glass panels and a folding carry handle. The clock is of pleasing small proportions, making it an attractive decorative piece for a desk, bedside or display cabinet. The white enamel dial displays Roman numerals with elegant blued steel hands and features a subsidiary alarm dial below. A glass viewing panel to the top allows the escapement to be seen in operation, while the glazed sides and rear door reveal the movement within. The clock is fitted with an eight day spring driven movement with alarm function, a practical and desirable feature often found in quality carriage clocks of the period. A delightful example of a classic travelling carriage clock, combining practical function with timeless decorative appeal. Condition In working order and good antique condition with age related wear to the brass case and minor marks consistent with age and use.
