Description

A wonderfully comfortable and beautifully proportioned antique leather wing armchair dating from the 19th century. This elegant chair is upholstered in richly aged hand-coloured leather, displaying a superb warm chestnut tone and the desirable natural patina that only develops through years of gentle use. The leather surface has a finely crackled character which adds depth and authenticity, enhancing its classic country house appeal. The chair features a traditional high wing back with shaped arms and decorative brass stud detailing, giving it both visual presence and practical comfort. The generous loose seat cushion provides a relaxed seating position, making it ideal as a fireside chair, library armchair, or statement piece in a study or sitting room. It stands on a handsome walnut frame with finely carved cabriole front legs and a well-constructed double stretcher base, demonstrating the solid craftsmanship typical of quality 19th century furniture. The proportions are particularly pleasing, combining elegance with robust construction.
