Description

A substantial Welsh oak dresser and rack, probably South West Wales, dating from the late 18th or early 19th century. The rack is surmounted by a broad moulded cornice with dentil-style detailing and turned pendant drops, above open plate shelves with a boarded back. A central open compartment is flanked by small panelled cupboard doors, providing useful enclosed storage alongside display space. The dresser base is fitted with three frieze drawers retaining turned brass knobs, above a pair of panelled cupboard doors enclosing a shelved interior. The sides are of simple framed construction and the piece stands on sturdy square legs. The oak throughout displays attractive grain and a rich, deep patina developed through age and use. A characterful example of traditional Welsh vernacular furniture, combining practical storage with ample space for the display of ceramics and domestic wares.
