Description

A finely crafted 19th-century walnut desk or library armchair of elegant and sculptural form. The chair features a shaped, wrap-around back with a broad curved crest rail flowing seamlessly into open arms, supported by a decorative pierced splat with stylised foliate detail. The seat is solid and dished for comfort, displaying attractive grain and rich patina consistent with age and use. The chair stands on three turned front legs fitted with original brass caps and castors, while the rear is supported by distinctive swept sabre legs that give the piece both stability and a graceful profile. The warm walnut tone and well-proportioned design make it a characterful example of 19th-century craftsmanship, suitable for use as a desk chair, library chair, or occasional seating.
