Description

Antique Georgian Mahogany D-End Extending Dining Table – Circa 1780 A fine late 18th century Georgian mahogany D-end extending dining table, dating to circa 1780 and raised on elegant tapered legs. The table displays beautiful figured mahogany throughout the top with a rich colour and pleasing patina developed over time. The table is constructed in the traditional D-end format, comprising two D-end sections, a centre table section, and an additional removable extension leaf. This allows the table to be arranged in several configurations depending on the space required. With the centre section and additional leaf in place the table extends to form a generous long dining table suitable for larger gatherings, while the centre section alone provides a smaller dining table for everyday use. The top shows attractive figuring and retains a warm tone, complemented by a simple moulded edge typical of the period. The table stands on well-proportioned tapered legs, giving it the refined elegance associated with Georgian furniture. A highly practical and versatile 18th century dining table, combining classic Georgian design with flexible functionality. Condition Good antique co...
