Description

Fights of drawers, such as this oak example dating to the 1930s, are becoming more popular than their 19th century counterparts. This is because they complement contemporary decorative tastes and still resonate with the younger generations that remember such pieces within their family homes. This flight still retains all its original label holders and handles. The top drawer is secured by a good quality brass lock for which a key has been cut. Now fully restored this chest is, once again, ready to be used and enjoyed.
