Date of manufacture: 17th century

Description

A pair of handsome and heart-warming carved oak faces, believed to originally have been adorning a large cupboard and which were carved by skilled hands in the second or third quartile of the 17th century. With a really good colour, wonderful definition and deep characterful patination, the faces must have been accessible as they have developed a lovely deep sheen to their noses and pronounced features from the touch of generations. I couldn't resist this pair of handsome happy bearded men, one apparently wearing a crown, and I hope they will find a good home. Dimensions are: 8.75 inches high, 2.25 inches wide and 2.5 inches deep
