Description

Now these are definitely something with a little more grandeur. This fabulous pair of Louis XV style bergère armchairs likely date from the late 19th century and feature a wonderful giltwood frames, beautifully carved with floral and foliate detailing, along with elegant scrolling decoration. The chairs stand on classic cabriole legs, which give them a lovely finishing touch and great presence. The gilt finish has developed a pleasing patina over time, revealing warm tones beneath the gilding and adding to their overall character. Both chairs retain their upholstered seats, backs, and sides in a patterned fabric, finished with traditional stud detailing. The deep cushions and curved backs make them very comfortable and inviting chairs. Originally intended for use in a drawing room, these bergères work just as well today in a living room, bedroom, boutique interior, or hospitality setting.
