Description

A large and impressive early 20th-century shop display counter, likely dating from the 1930s. The counter features a substantial glass showcase with a chrome-frame, allowing items to be viewed clearly from all sides. The interior retains its green velvet-lined display surface, ideal for presenting jewellery, watches, collectibles, or other small retail items. The glazed case sits on a solid mahogany base with simple tapered legs, giving the piece an elegant yet practical design typical of high-quality shop fittings from the period. The long proportions make it particularly well suited to use as a central shop display or island counter, where customers could view items from multiple angles.
