Description

Large Japanese Cloisonne Charger with Buddahs. Circa 1890. Central panel depicting rare scene of officials / scholars (most likely buddahs) sitting near a stream and surrounded by finely rendered foliage, flowers, pods (Katydid) and lotus plants. The attention to detail in their colourful clothing and formal costumes is superb. The visual storytelling portraying themes of education, wisdom, and hierarchy, amidst virtues of every-day life, including serenity and wisdom. The rococo-style cloisonne enamel scrolling around both the central panel and borders and diaper decoration framing the figural panels are finely executed with rich / brass gold wire, adding a luxurious touch typical of imperial-quality famille rose porcelain. The overall cloisonne enamel charger of superior quality. The back of the plate also beautifully decorated in fine cloisonne wire work with details of flowers and grasses. Central area with Da Ming character (often applied to Japanese works). Condition: Excellent and original condition. One small mark to flower at top left position with very minor spalling on reverse. [Display stand not included]. Dimensions: Diameter = 39.5cm. Depth = 5cm
