Description

A really characterful early 20th century table lamp, dating to around the 1920s–1930s. The lamp is cast in metal with a dark, aged patinated finish, most likely spelter, and is designed in a decorative candelabra form with scrolling arms and a central stem. The shape takes inspiration from earlier candle lighting, but this was made as an electric piece from the outset. It retains its original candle sleeves and fittings, along with an integrated switch to the base, typical of the period. The overall look has a nice slightly gothic / revival feel, with the scrolling arms giving it a good sense of movement.
