Description

Impressive antique carved oak hall settle in the Renaissance Revival style featuring richly carved panels and bold sculptural decoration throughout. Great for that farmhouse look, these work really well in a hallway with all the storage room. Bought from a private house sale in Suffolk. The tall back is formed of three panels, the central panel carved in relief with a dramatic historical scene depicting two figures in medieval dress, flanked by panels carved with classical profile busts framed by foliate ornament. The arms terminate in finely carved lion head terminals, while the front rail is decorated with scrolling foliage and shield motifs. The deep seat lifts to reveal generous internal storage, a traditional feature of monks benches designed for use in entrance halls and country houses. The bench is executed in dark oak with a wonderful aged patina, the carving displaying strong Renaissance Revival influence typical of continental furniture of the late nineteenth century. A striking architectural piece that would make a superb statement in a hallway, library, or country house interior. Circa 1800. Offered in great shape.
