Description

Set of four horse sketches by Brigadier-General Alfred Crowdy Lovett CBE (1862–27 May 1919) on rare woven stamped paper and signature visible on one of the sketches. They are mounted in fairly basic frames. Hew was a British military artist known for his illustrations of military uniforms in British India. His work included watercolours and chromolithographs that depicted the uniforms of the British Army during the colonial era. His art serves as a historical record of military attire from that period. Alfred Crowdy Lovett was born in 1862 to James C. Lovett, a senior postal department official, and Ellen H. Lovett. He was raised in Croydon, London. Lovett exhibited an early talent for art, securing third place in a competition run by The Boy's Own Paper, a well-known British magazine. Lovett joined the Gloucestershire Regiment in 1882. His service included postings in Karachi and western India, where he lived in Poona, Ahmednagar, and Bombay from 1883 to 1893. Following this period, Lovett participated in a military campaign in Aden and later returned to England to work as a military instructor. Around 1901–1902, Lovett resumed active service and played a significant...
