Description

A lovely post impressionist city scene from the early 20th century, depicting a Gothic cathedral overlooking a public square during the morning commute. The composition captures a hazy morning light, with the Gothic facade rendered in broad, textured brushwork. In the foreground, the artist has captured the daily life of the city: working people in hats and heavy coats, figures carrying loads, and passers-by moving through the shadows of the monumental architecture. The oil on board bears an indistinct signature to the lower left which I have not been able to identify and measures 27 x 35 cm. The overall framed size in a good vintage frame with a painted inner slip is 45 x 53 cm
