Description

A charming and characterful 18th-century English oak hanging spice cupboard, retaining a superb deep patina and hand-forged iron butterfly hinges. This piece was probably traditionally used in a country kitchen and remains a highly functional and decorative. It has had a few changes which include a replacement back and side base mouldings. The lock is a functioning replacement, however the escutcheon is no longer present. PLEASE NOTE: Trestles are for photography purposes only and not included.
