Description

A superb Victorian silver plated Corinthian column table lamp, dating to circa 1880, of elegant and classical design. The fluted column is surmounted by a finely cast Corinthian capital, richly detailed with acanthus leaves, and raised on a stepped square base adorned with applied wreath motifs. The whole stands on distinctive lion's paw feet, giving the piece both presence and a strong architectural character. The silver plating has mellowed beautifully over time, developing a soft, aged patina that enhances the depth and detail of the casting. The proportions are particularly pleasing, making it an ideal statement piece for a side table, console, or desk. This form takes inspiration from classical antiquity and was highly popular in the late 19th century, reflecting the Victorian taste for grand, neoclassical design. Measurements not including shade
