Description

A finely modelled porcelain figure of a theatrical actor with mask, produced in Paris by Edmé Samson, circa 1860-1880, after Chelsea models. The figure stands before a tree support with dense bocage on a rococo base, decorated in bright enamels with gilt accents. The composition reflects the decorative interpretation of 18th-century English porcelain typical of Samson. Samson exhibited internationally and gained recognition at major exhibitions. Examples of the firm's work entered museum collections, including the South Kensington Museum (now the Victoria and Albert Museum). Encyclopaedia Britannica notes that Samson actively produced hard-paste copies after Chelsea. Mark: small gold anchor to reverse. A decorative and collectible Samson figure in the Chelsea taste. Measurements Height: 17.5 cm Width: 11 cm Depth: 8 cm Weight: 449 g Condition Chips to several leaves in the upper part of the bocage; loss to the feather on the hat; loss to the tip of the right shoe; loss to the index finger of the right hand; otherwise in good condition.
