Description

An antique English Victorian mahogany serpentine console hall table, beautifully crafted in figured mahogany with a shaped top and elegant flowing outline. Raised on finely carved cabriole legs with scroll and foliate detail, the table features a shaped frieze centred with a decorative carved motif, all finished in a rich warm tone with lovely natural depth of colour. Console tables such as this were designed to stand against a wall in entrance halls or drawing rooms, but examples of this quality offer more than simple function. The serpentine front creates a softer, more refined outline, while the figured mahogany was carefully selected to showcase the natural beauty of the timber. The carved cabriole legs reflect earlier Georgian influence that remained popular into the Victorian period, and the shell motif to the frieze is a classic detail often found on better-quality pieces, adding depth and character. A highly decorative and versatile piece, ideal for a hallway, sitting room or landing, offering classic Victorian design and quality craftsmanship. Condition report: In very good condition for its age with a lovely polished finish. Minor age-related marks to the surfac...
