Description

This is a beautiful large scale early 19th century oil portrait painting on canvas depicting three young angelic looking children, studio of 'Sir Thomas Lawrence being attributed to one of his pupils and possibly produced under his influence. Lawrence is well known for producing a portrait of The Calmady Children (Emily, 1818-?1906, and Laura Anne, 1820-1894) Emily and Laura Anne were the children of Charles Calmady of Langdon Court in Devonshire. Their portrait— shown at the Royal Academy, and engraved under the title Nature—has always been one of Lawrence's most popular works. Originals by Lawrence have been on display in The Metropolitan Museum Of Art In New York and our version offered for sale bears close similarities to well known museum examples. His studio produced many copies of his best known works to meet demand and these were often completed by his pupils or studio assistants. In his latter years the artist struggled financially and with his health and so moved back to his family address in Greek St London from where he tried to keep up with demands for paintings. When he eventually died in 1830, there were many unfinished paintings ...
