Description

A fine Chippendale period mahogany serpentine writing desk c.1760-80, complete with working lock and key. The moulded rectangular top sits above a formed rectangular drawer which, when opened, extends the whole serpentine front to reveal a green baize lined slide, beneath which is a fitted interior boasting four brass handled short drawers, a filing division and a hinged quadrant side drawer. The whole sits upon four chamfered legs with shaped brackets. Historic later brasses to the front. The whole boasts an exceptional patina and colour throughout. An extremely attractive piece of unusual form. For a similar example, see Edward T. Joy, The Country Life Book Of English Furniture, Wisbech 1968, p. 50 ('Thomas Chippendale (178-1719) And The Rococo Period'), fig. 59.
