Description

A handsome Scottish Regency mahogany and rosewood crossbanded sofa table probably by James Mein of Kelso. The top with unusual curl figuring to the mahogany and rosewood crossbanded edge above a frieze with five sunken panels with beading and further rosewood crossbanding, the shaped beaded supports for the table flaps terminating with roundels enhancing the table in the open position, with two drawers to one side and the same decoration and false drawers to the other side allowing it to be used in a freestanding position, raised on four turned columns on a concave quadrupartite beaded platform base centred by a large boss with conforming tier above, on scroll legs with further bosses and with brass castors. Good colour and all joints firm, some veneer losses mainly to the side edges and the frieze but polished over or filled.
