Description

This vestibule doorway or front door set is crafted from solid walnut featuring leaded diamond glass with matching sidelights and square columns. The glass has a subtle golden tint showing a presence of bubbles and a slight waviness in the panes, elements which are both considered a sign of charm and high-quality craftsmanship. These are complete architectural elements from the early 20th century, preserved in their original condition with a natural, time worn patina. The glass panels are stable, with only two minor imperfections that are easy to overlook: a fine, stable hairline fissure and a small X shaped scratch. Both are located on the door and are visible in the accompanying images. The surface shows some old, inactive worm traces (treated as a precaution) that can be addressed during the restoration/installation process. Most of the dimensions appear in one of the images.
