Description

Handcrafted in 15ct rose gold with traditional silver-topped settings, this elegant Victorian bangle features approximately 1.70 carats of natural old mine cut diamonds, beautifully accented by an estimated 0.40 carats of natural rose cut diamonds. The graduating old mine cut diamonds are arranged in an exquisite openwork square lattice design, highlighted by delicate rose cut diamond accents throughout. Set in silver in the traditional Victorian manner to enhance their brilliance, the diamonds display a soft, romantic shimmer so characteristic of fine 19th-century jewellery. Accompanied by a Birmingham Assay Office gem report confirming the principal old mine cut diamonds, this remarkable bangle offers an estimated combined total diamond weight of approximately 2.10 carats. The graduating principal diamonds are beautifully proportioned, drawing the eye to the centre of the bracelet, while the intricate openwork design gives remarkable delicacy despite its substantial presence. Elegant, timeless, and deeply feminine, this bangle sits beautifully on the wrist and would make a superb heirloom acquisition. Such finely preserved Victorian diamond bangles of this quality, ...
