Description

This magnificent namakdan, woven in fine, tight soumak technique on the face and neck, was woven by Afshar tribes inhabiting the Kuhi Jebal Barezi mountains in Kerman Province, southern Persia around 1880-1900. The incredible range of weaving techniques on the face of the bag and rear neck shows the skill of these nomads in the Kuhi Jebal Barezi during the 19th century. The back of the bag is in simple madder-red plain-weave - only the neck is in soumak weave here. The selvedges are overbound in goat-hair and the remains of the braided handle remain emanating from the neck. A truly fabulous salt-bag. Size: 52cm x 43cm (1' 9" x 1' 5").
