Description

A charming English oak cricket table of traditional country house form, raised on three splayed legs united by a shaped tripod underframe. The circular top displays attractive grain, rich colour, and pleasing signs of age-related wear, giving the piece wonderful character and authenticity. Cricket tables were a practical and enduring form of vernacular English furniture, their three-legged construction allowing them to sit steadily on uneven stone floors. This example has a particularly honest, rustic quality, with simple tapered legs and strong country house appeal. Ideal as a lamp table, occasional table, or decorative accent in both traditional and contemporary interiors. A highly decorative and versatile piece of classic English vernacular furniture.
