Description

A striking and highly decorative late 19th century carved oak Wainscot chair in the 17th century manner, featuring a boldly carved cresting, shaped scroll arms and richly carved lozenge panel back. This wonderfully characterful chair draws inspiration from traditional 17th century Wainscot chairs, displaying many of the classic features associated with the form including substantial plank construction, geometric carved decoration, solid seat and a combination of square and turned supports united by stretchers. The deeply carved foliate crest rail gives the piece particularly strong visual presence and a wonderfully sculptural quality. Traditionally, Wainscot chairs were associated with status and craftsmanship, often placed in halls, parlours and principal rooms within country houses and manor homes. This example beautifully captures that historic character while remaining highly practical and decorative for modern interiors. The chair has developed a wonderfully rich deep oak patina and displays excellent age, colour and texture throughout. It would work beautifully as a hall chair, occasional chair, desk chair or statement piece within both traditional and contemporary...
