Description

This superb early 19th century Felspar porcelain sucrier was used as a container for sugar. It is richly painted with brilliant detail on a white ground with a delicate design of floral and leafy garlands in blue, green and red enamel, interspersed with finely painted gilding known as Angouleme pattern. It has two side handles for lifting the body and a finely moulded and pierced gilt knob for the cover. This fine piece of early English porcelain is in excellent condition with almost no wear to the gilding. There is no damage or restoration. English, circa 1830
