Description

A large pair of Japanese Arita, Kyushu, porcelain scalloped charger plates in the Imari palette, dating to the Meiji period, circa 1880-1900. Their impressive scale, segmented decoration and rich colouring reflect the mature decorative language of late 19th century Japanese export porcelain intended for buyers who valued highly ornamented East Asian wares. Each plate is painted in the traditional kinran-de palette of underglaze cobalt blue, iron red, green and gilt enamels. The decoration is arranged through asymmetrical fan-shaped reserves, angular cartouches and shaped panels derived from East Asian fans, screens and textile designs, creating the layered composition associated with Japanese Imari porcelain. One plate is decorated with lively figural scenes including attendant children and small human figures within stylised landscape reserves, reflecting the karako tradition popular in Meiji-period export wares. The companion plate combines cranes, floral motifs and ornamental devices within the same asymmetrical decorative scheme associated with late 19th century Arita Imari production. The reverse sides are decorated with freely painted underglaze blue karakusa-sty...
