Description

George II-III Mahogany Wrythen-Turned Tripod Supper Table, c.1760 A fine mid-18th-century mahogany tripod supper table of the George II-III transitional period, dating to circa 1760, crafted in well-figured Cuban mahogany with a deep, mellow, naturally developed patina. The table retains its original 80 cm circular one-piece top — a desirable early feature — and is supported on an elegant wrythen-turned (angled reeded) column of excellent proportion, a detail associated with the refined late George II and early George III taste of the 1750s–60s. The downswept legs with pad feet are beautifully shaped, well balanced, and entirely original, giving the table a strong yet graceful stance typical of quality mid-Georgian tripod tables. Beneath the top is a fully original birdcage mechanism, allowing the top to rotate and tilt, with the block, pillars, and period locking catch all remaining intact and undisturbed, and showing excellent consistency of surface and wear throughout. A full set of additional images is available on request. Dimensions (approximate): Height: 70 cm (27 1/2 in) Diameter: 80 cm (31 1/2 in) Condition: Structurally excellent with no loose joints.
