Description

Regency Mahogany Serpentine Dressing Table Mirror, Three Drawers, Boxwood Stringing, c.1805–1825 A refined Regency period mahogany dressing table mirror, dating to the early 19th century, circa 1805–1825. The piece is of elegant serpentine form, the well-figured mahogany base fitted with three drawers and supporting an oval mirror plate within a shaped frame. The base is decorated with fine boxwood and ebony stringing, set within a crossbanded border, the top displaying a pleasing colour and natural variation to the grain. The drawers retain their original turned bone handles, with matching roundel terminals to the uprights, providing a subtle and attractive contrast. The central drawer is fitted with its original working lock and key. The mirror plate appears to be original and retains a good, usable surface, showing some light marks and very small spots of foxing consistent with age. The drawers are oak lined and run well. The piece stands on well-shaped ogee bracket feet, completing a balanced and practical design. A particularly attractive and honest example, offering both decorative appeal and useful storage, well suited to a range of interiors. Dimensions: Height:...
