Description

This antique 20th-century oak dining set, comprising a draw-leaf dining table and four matching chairs, is a beautifully crafted example of Edwardian style furniture, showcasing excellent quality and traditional workmanship throughout. The dining table features a practical draw-leaf extending mechanism, allowing the hidden leaves to be easily pulled out when additional dining space is required. Beautifully carved with a high attention to detail, the table is supported by an attractive refractory-style base, giving the piece both character and stability. The oak displays gorgeous natural grain and warm colour throughout, adding to its timeless appeal. The four matching dining chairs complement the table perfectly, each standing on turned legs with supportive cross stretchers for added strength and durability. The chairs are fitted with comfortable drop-in seats upholstered in an attractive floral fabric, enhancing the traditional charm of the set. Presented in very good condition, this is a very desirable and well-made dining suite that would make a stunning addition to any dining room, perfectly suited to both period and contemporary interiors alike.
