Description

Description A superb and elegant 18th-century plain stem wine goblet dating to circa 1760. It has a large flared bell bowl with a finely engraved Rococo border beneath the rim, comprising trailing scrolls, pendant loops and stylised floral ornament. Plain stem above a broad helmet foot. A particularly refined example, the restrained form contrasting beautifully with the elaborate engraving. Date & Origin England, c1760. Period of King George III. Condition Excellent. No chips, cracks or restoration. Dimensions Height: 19cm Rim diameter: 8.3cm Foot diameter: 8.1cm Provenance The George Hurran Collection. Historical Context Rococo engraving refers to a highly decorative ornamental style that became fashionable across Europe during the mid-18th century, roughly c.1730–1770. In glass engraving, it is characterised by flowing asymmetrical scrollwork, delicate curves, naturalistic foliage, floral sprays, shells, loops and playful, highly elegant ornament. The style emerged from French decorative arts during the reign of Louis XV and spread into silver, furniture, porcelain, architecture and glass. The word “Rococo,” itself derives from the French rocaille, meaning shell or...
