Description

A highly decorative and charming early 19th-century folk art wooden horse sculpture. This piece features a beautifully stylized, naive form with a wonderfully aged dark patina and a beautifully preserved silhouette. Unlike many solid carvings of this era, the horse's body is constructed with a hollow core, showcasing exceptional regional craftsmanship and historic construction techniques. Having small, elegant proportions, this striking primitive sculpture makes an outstanding decorative statement piece. It is ideally suited for display on a console table, mantelpiece, or positioned as a focal point in front of a mirror. Good antique condition with historic wear, it stands on its four legs with no need of a support.
