Description

A handsome silver-plated reflector candle lamp, English, late 19th to early 20th century. The stepped circular base supports twin turned columns surmounted by a segmented parabolic reflector with oval aperture and twin candle sockets. Constructed principally in silver-plate on copper, the reflector displays pleasing areas of exposed copper where the plating has worn, creating an attractive contrast, complemented by brass edging details. Each candle sits within a sleeve and is supported by a spring-loaded mechanism, allowing it to remain at an effective height as the candle burns. The base is engraved with a presentation inscription dated July 1913 to J. Huck, M.A., from the members of the St Bees Choral Society, adding an interesting historical association. Beautifully crafted and robust. The neatly formed reflector panels and rear canister cast a wonderful warm light when illuminated, providing both a practical source of candlelight and a charming atmospheric glow. Condition: Very good and ready to place. Age-related wear including surface marks, polishing scratches and rubbing to the silver-plate, with copper showing through in places. Minor dents and blemishes commensu...
